COUNT. (Gushingly.) It is for love—(Checking herself, and, drily,)—of the people!

FRAN. Of the people? You!—the sister of that furious royalist, the Marquis de Pontcornet?

COUNT. Ah! I am as much in advance of the times, as the Marquis is behind them. (With enthusiasm.) I am for liberty of every kind—that is (Simpering.), every liberty that is wholly proper!

FRAN. Ah! I see! (Aside.) Some lunatic.

COUNT. Do these sentiments surprise you? They are easily explained. I'm a widow. My husband was a philosopher. He taught me very many interesting things; among others, the important truth that, noble or plebeian, a man is always a man!

FRAN. I think there can be no doubt of it.

COUNT. (Tenderly.) And that plebeian and gentlemen are equal before nature, love and beauty. I have met at the chateau many a gentleman who had the manners of a plebeian! I know a plebeian (Warm and gushingly.) who—has the manners and the fascinations—Do you—oh, do you understand me?

FRAN. Perfectly! You do not wish to compromise yourself, and you want me to be your interpreter with this fascinating plebeian you have condescended to notice.

COUNT. Ah, yes! (Gushingly.)

FRAN. You want a philosophico passionate letter.

COUNT. (Coyly.) You have guessed it! You are as intelligent as you are handsome.

FRAN. But first, Madame, will you permit me to dispose of these worthy people? I shall then be wholly at your service.

COUNT. As you will, sir! (FANCOIS goes up and speaks to OMNES.) Not a bad way to obtain a tête-à-tête! In the meanwhile, I'll consult Militza, to learn how my plan will succeed. (Going towards MILITZA'S house, and turning.) I'll soon return, Francois. (Aside.) He's lovely! (Exit into house.)

FRAN. (Coming down.) Well; whose turn is it now?

KIRSCH. Mine! I'm in haste. Besides, I'm in a rage, also. I have received this letter from my wife in Switzerland. She calls names! She abuses me! I want you to answer it, and to show that I can be as insulting as she is!

FRAN. What does she say?

KIRSCH. (Furious.) What does she say! What dosen't she say! Listen. (Reads.) "My poor Kirschwasser: I married you through stupidity. I quarrelled with you—I made you unhappy! I thought you an idiot. It is true. I ask your pardon. I am wrong. I do not wish to explain my error. You would never understand me. But pardon me. You shall see; write to me at once, care of Uncle Schwartz, who will deliver to me your letter. If you do not comply, you don't know what may happen."

"CATHERINE KIRSCHWASSER."

There! (Gives letter to FRANCOIS.) An idiot, eh! She threatens, does she? Ah! Wait till I write!

FRAN. (Reading letter.) My dear fellow, you have misunderstood it. Let me punctuate it for you. (Reads with emotion.) "My poor Kirschwasser: I married you! Through stupidity, I quarrelled with you; I made you unhappy! I thought you an idiot, it is true; I ask your pardon. I am wrong. I do not wish to explain my fault; you would never understand me. But pardon me: you shall see. Write to me at once, care of Uncle Schwartz, who will deliver to me your letter. If you do not comply, you don't know what may happen."

"CATHERINE KIRSCHWASSER."

(During the reading KIRSCH is moved, and, at last, blubbers, and mumbles unintelligibly.)

KIRSCH. Knapsacks and bayonets! I didn't understand it so at first! Poor Catherine!

FRAN. What answer shall I make?

KIRSCH. (Blubbling.) She is unhappy! She yearns for me!

FRAN. As you see! (Holds out letter.)

KIRSCH. (Changing his tone.) Well, I'm not unhappy, and I don't yearn for her. She wants more of my hair! (FRANCOIS goes up, angry.)

OMNES. Ha, ha, ha!

KIRSCH. (To soldiers who have come forward.) Eyes front! Dress!

MANON. (Aside, to market-women.) Now that Francois is here, we can give him his surprise.

KIRSCH. (Overhearing.) A surprise?

JULIETTE. (In a low voice.) Hush! To-day is the anniversary of the coming of Francois to set up his shop here.

MANON. And we are going to celebrate it!

KIRSCH. Bravo! I'm with you. In an hour, I'll return. Wait for me. (To soldiers.) To the left about! Left! Forward! March!

The first system of the score consists of two vocal staves and a grand piano accompaniment. The vocal lines are in a minor key and feature a melodic line with lyrics. The piano accompaniment provides harmonic support with chords and moving lines in both hands.

(Exeunt all except FRANCOIS, GRATINET, COURTALIN and NICOLET.)

true. 'Tis Francois, yes, Francois, hosed in blue.

The second system continues the musical piece. It includes two vocal staves with lyrics and a piano accompaniment. The piano part includes a dynamic marking of mf (mezzo-forte) in the lower register.

The third system is a piano accompaniment section. It features a complex texture with many chords and moving lines in both the treble and bass staves. A dynamic marking of dim. (diminuendo) is placed above the system.

The fourth system is another piano accompaniment section, continuing the complex texture from the previous system. It also features a dim. dynamic marking.

FRAN. Come, Nicolet! Pens, ink, and paper, and then to work!

NICO. I'll make them ready. (Exit into shop.)

COURT. (Saluting him.) Brother!

FRAN. (Giving hand to each.) Ah! You here? (Looks cautiously over his shoulder, and says in undertone.) Well, what now? (NICOLET places tables and chairs outside shop, with pens, ink and paper, and exits.)

GRAT. Good! And you? Can the Committee of Gravilliens count upon you?

FRAN. (Smiles.) On me? Francois Bernier? On me, who was forced to fly from Besancon for my liberal opinions, and take refuge in Paris? Have I not given you a thousand proofs of my devotion to the cause?

COURT. Well, then, do you know the Marquis de Pontcornet?

FRAN. I do. Very rich, and very influential with the king and his ministers.

GRAT. (Contemptuously.) An old monopolist, whose chateau at Pitou was burned by the peasants during the famine.

FRAN. (Shrugging his shoulders.) Yes; while he was away in Paris to buy food for them!

COURT. Oh, we know you befriend him.

FRAN. Because I know him, and have always found him kind to the poor, and considerate to all.

COURT. Well, that's your lookout. It is true, nevertheless, that he favors the most unpopular measures;—that he is a mad reactionist;—that he writes songs!

FRAN. (Laughs.) I know that; for I correct them for him.

COURT. He is marked as a very dangerous man.

FRAN. (Laughs.) He dangerous? Absurd!

GRAT. He is an enemy, and you are asked to watch him.

FRAN. That is not difficult.

COURT. Now let us into the house. I want to show you a list of new followers of which you must take a copy at once.

FRAN. Come, then. Nicolet is one of us, so we have nothing to fear from him. This way. (They pass before FANCOIS, and enter shop.) Pontcornet dangerous! What an idea! (Exit into shop, laughing.)

Enter LANSAC and JASMIN, L. I. E., as FRANCOIS is separating.

LAN. You understand, Jasmin?

JAS. Perfectly. The young girl who has the audacity to resist us, is to be carried off. I have accordingly taken care to provide a good carriage, a pair of swift horses, and a driver who may be relied upon. The carriage will be at nightfall at the upper end of this square. (Points up R.)

LAN. You are an intelligent rascal?

JAS. (Bows.) There is, however, one important consideration;—the finances. Hire of horses and carriages, ten louis; to keep the postillion from falling asleep, two louis—one for each eye; for the services of—the friend who is to assist me—five louis. (During the last enumeration he is somewhat embarrassed, and eyes LANSAC closely.)

LAN. (Sarcastically.) Prudent rogue!

JAS. (Bowing.) You are too kind. May I add, that if your uncle and my master, the Marquis de Pontcornet, should learn that I have been engaged in this respectable business, I shall be kicked out of doors. I shall lose my place. Total—a sufficiently large sum to pay all expenses, and recompense me as well.

LAN. I understand. You should be well paid; but I have lost my last louis to-night at the faro table!

JAS. (Dismayed.) The deuce you have!

LAN. Don't let that interfere with your arrangements. I don't see how I shall do it at present, but if you must have this money to-night, it shall be forthcoming. I have resolved to carry off the pretty Fantine this very evening.

JAS. Then I have your word of honor as to the money?

LAN. You have. And I may rely on you?

JAS. On the word of an honest man!

LAN. (Looks at him dubiously.) No juggling, now!

JAS. Oh, sir! Everything shall take place as you desire. (Going up and aside.) Without me, however!

LAN. Good! But where shall I obtain the money!

Enter COUNTESS from MILITZA'S house.

COUNT. (Speaking as she enters.) I'll wait for her no longer.

LAN. (Sees her.) Ah! My dear aunt? And in this attire? What are you doing here?

COUNT. What are you doing here?

LAN. I—I—I am killing time. And you?—

COUNT. (Points to MILITZA'S house.) For the fortune teller, yonder.

LAN. Ah! You believe in the cards, then. So do I. (With meaning.) The cards never lie!

COUNT. Do you think so?

LAN. I know it! If they say you shall be loved by a pretty brunette of a girl, or a poetic blonde of a man, believe them.

COUNT. (Sings.) And do you think so! So do I; for I believe too in them.

LAN. Do you? (With sudden thought.) Can you imagine what they predicted for me this morning? Why, that a tender-hearted relation of mine,—a woman of noble soul and deep affection,—would lend me a thousand francs, of which I have immediate need!

COUNT. It meant me!

LAN. Assuredly. The cards promised you love,—me money. The cards never lie.

COUNT. Me love? Ah! (Lacadaisically.) Can it be? Come! Their prophesy shall be realized in your case. I am so happy, I can refuse you nothing. Go with me and I'll give you a thousand francs. May their prophesy about me be realized as soon!

(Sighs aside.) Ah, Francois!

LAN. (Delighted.) My dear aunt! (Enter NICOLET from shop.)

NICO. (Aside.) To see that the way is clear.

COUNT. (Sees him.) Your master is there!

NICO. Yes, but busy—very busy.

COUNT. Tell him I will return, and to wait for me. (Aside.) First, to get rid of my nephew.

LAN. (Aside.) With the money in my pocket, Fantine is mine.

COUNT. (Going up, R.) Are you coming, nephew?

LAN. Yes, adorable aunt! (Gives her his arm. They exeunt, R. U. E. NICOLET follows them up.)

NICO. The coast is clear at last. (Goes to shop.) You can come out now.

Enter GRATINET, COURTALIN, and FRANCOIS from shop.

COURT. It is understood, then?

FRAN. Perfectly. (Cheers and shouts outside, R. 2. E.)

GRAT. What is that?

NICO. (Looking off R.) Fantine, the street-singer.

FRAN. (With interest, and moved.) Fantine!

NICO. Ah! She is here!

COURT. Good bye!

GRAT. Remember Pontcornet!

FRAN. Rely on me!

COURTALIN and GRATINET exeunt L. I. E., followed by FRANCOIS, Enter FANTINE, holding songs in her hand, and surrounded by crowd who follow her.

FRAN. At last, my dear Fantine, we ate alone! But, first, tell me—has this young nobleman followed you again, and tried to speak with you?

FAN. (Smiles at him.) Jealous fellow that you are. But no! I have not seen him for more than a week. He has discovered that it is useless to pursue me, I suppose. How good you are to me,—the poor street singer, who scarcely knows how to read and write; who owes the little she does know, all to you!

Enter MILITZA, L. I. E.

MIL. What do I see!

FAN. (Quitting FRANCOIS.) Militza!

FRAN. The deuce! (Ashamed, and taking chair and tab'le to shop to simulate pressing occupation.)

MIL. Well, miss, are these the principles I have taught you?

FRAN. Don't be angry. I love her, and would make her my wife.

MIL. What! A poor girl without a sous? Your wife!

FRAN. Yes; you'll surely not withhold your consent. (Taps her under chin.) Eh! We love each other, you know. Come, say yes!

MIL. If she is willing, I'm sure I should have no objection. Besides, she's only my child by adoption, and I shall be glad to see her the wife of an honest man. The girl was found in the country by peasants, and given to them by a strolling company of acrobats. I was then one of them, and took charge of her. The manager did not like it; but he was a drunken brute who used to beat me. He wanted to beat her too, and so, one night, I ran away with Fantine yonder, and since then we have lived as we could, and—here we are.

FRAN. What matters her past to me? I love her. That's enough!

FAN. Dear Francois?—

MIL. But I must go and get breakfast ready. While thinking of the heart, we musn't forget the stomach. You can spare me, I presume. (Slyly.) Eh? Well, well. While I am gone, bill and coo, you happy noodles—bill and coo! (Exit into house.)

FRAN. What a good-hearted creature; and how much I owe her for having guarded for me such a treasure as my Fantine!

FAN. And you love me so very much then. (FRANCOIS kisses her.)

Enter PONTCORNET, R. U. E.

PONT. Do I disturb you?

FRAN. Oh! The Marquis de Pontcornet!

FAN. (Aside, and starts. Struck.) Pontcornet—Pontcornet! (Re-ffects.)

PONT. I want you, Francois, but I see you are—ahem! busy! (Smiles. Looks through eye-glass at FANTINE.) Upon my word, a pretty girl—a very pretty girl. (Points to songs she has in her hand, which she seized when surprised by the Marquis.) What have you there?

FAN. (Curtseys.) Songs, if you please.

PONT. Songs? Do you sell songs?

FAN. (Curtseys) Yes, if you please?

PONT. What a curious coincidence! I write them.

FAN. What you? You write songs—like these?

PONT. Like these? Like anything. Of late, I have been writing them against the revolutionists. (Takes paper from pocket.) For instance, here is one that will inevitably overturn the factions at present trying to ruin our country with their republican ideas. Here, Francois, take the song and correct it. (To FANTINE.) And you, little one, sing it. Make it popular, and your fortune is assured; for it will win the favor of the king. I sing the praises of royalty.

FRAN. Yes; but the people will not sing anything of that kind.

PONT. The people will sing what they are made to sing!

FRAN. Not always!

PONT. You will observe I have adopted a familiar bantering tone. Listen. (Declaims poem.)

Ye sons of France, give ear to me,
While I unto you all explain
How through our glorious ruler we
Seek not prosperity in vain.
In our finances, no confusion;
By our laws, the people blest;
Money rolling in profusion;
And no taxes we detest.
And this is by all confessed.
And this, you see,
Will ever be
While France is ruled by royalty.

FRAN. (Alarmed.) Not so loud, Marquis!—at least, here, near the market, where such sentiments are not popular.

PONT. There are eighteen more verses like that. Do you see the idea? Now, correct my verses—make them run smoothly, and let this little one sing them. My protection is assured you, and your fortune also.

FRAN. (Takes paper.) I will attend to it, Marquis.

PONT. I will return for them shortly. (To FAN.) And I shall not forget you. (Aside.) Decidedly, some of the daughters of the common people are very pretty! (Aloud.) By the way, Francois, be particular about the spelling. A nobleman has no time to attend to such a trifle. Au revoir. (Exit R.)

FAN. They would pelt me with stones if I were to sing that song!

FAN. (Looking after FRAN) How happy he is, and how I love him!

COUNT. (Aside.) I have it! (Stops FAN. as she is about to enter MILITZA'S house.) A word with you, child. Where did you learn that song?

FAN. (Smiles.) It seems as if I had always known it from my infancy.

COUNT. (Anxiously.) And where was your infancy passed?

FAN. Oh, it was a grand house, somewhere, with large old trees, and shady walks!

COUNT. Was it in Pitou?

FAN. (Astonished.) That's what Militza called it. How did you know? I remember some wicked men who burned everything in the chateau, and then — all is confused till I remember Militza, who took me from a man who wanted to beat me, and ran away with me to the gypsies; and then I grew up and began to sing for them from town to town — and — and — here I am, the street singer, Fantine.

COUNT. (Aside.) Can it be she? Impossible! My brother must see her! (Aloud.) I am the Countess de la Savonniere, sister of the Marquis de Pontcornet.

FAN. (Startled.) Again that name! (Puts her hand to her head, absorbed in thought.)

COUNT. (Aside.) There can be no doubt. (Aloud.) My child, you sing very prettily. My brother is fond of music, and he must hear you. Come — come with me. You cannot refuse me. Ten louis for two little songs.

FAN. But my mother?

COUNT. Militza? I will take you both. Bring her hither quickly. We will go at once.

FAN. (Aside.) Ten louis! With that I should not go to dear Francois quite dowerless! (Aloud.) I'll go, Madame. (Exit quickly into MILITZA'S house.)

COUNT. This would complete my happiness, should it really be my long-lost niece. I should then be rid of a troublesome rival; for though Francois may wed Fantine, the street-singer, he certainly could not hope to aspire to Mlle. Pontcornet. Ah, that nephew of mine, de Lansac, told me the cards said I should succeed in love. (Enter FAN. and MIL. from house.)

FAN. Oh, yes! (Aside.) I must save him. (Aloud.) My friends, I have a great piece of news for you. Pontcornet, the implacable royalist, stirred by the example of so many others, has come over to the side of the people!

OMNES. He?

FAN. Yes, he! It astonishes you, doesn't it? It did me! Yes, he is devoted to the cause of liberty; in proof of which you shall hear a song of his which he has given me but now, with the request that Fantine and myself should teach it to you. (Aside, laughing.) Poor Pontcornet! I must do it!

OMNES.—It is shameful! Outrageous!

JAS. The idea of the Marquis fraternizing with the vulgar people!
A Marquis writing songs about liberty! Bah!

OMNES. Bah!

JAS. We can't condescend to remain with such a master!

OMNES. No! No!

(Cries outside, L.)—"Long live Pontcornet!"

JAS. Do you hear that? Market people cheering the Marquis. It disgraces him! It disgraces us!

Enter PONTCORNET, C. excitedly.

PONT. (Speaking as he enters.) Yes, my friends! You may count upon me! (Comes down.) Good people, they call me their liberator. Why, I don't know! (Sees JASMIN.) Here, Jasmin! (Gives him hat and cane.)

JAS. (Taking them stiffly.) I have the honor to offer my resignation to the Marquis—I beg pardon!—to citizen Pontcornet!

PONT. Why, what do you mean, you impudent rascal?

JAS. The ladies and gentlemen (pointedly) here assembled, cannot preserve their self-respect and serve a friend of the mob at the same time. That is our ultimatum;—if the word is right.

OMNES. Yes! Our ultimatum;—if the word is right.

PONT. (Furious.) Scoundrels,—idiots,—ragamuffins!

JAS. (Pleased.) Ah! Scoundrels,—idiots,—ragamuffins! He is not changed then. He is not converted to liberal ideas!

JAS. Thanks, for this testimony to your fidelity to the traditions of your race. We will not leave you.

OMNES. No, no! Long live the Marquis.

JAS. And now we can resume our preparations for to-night's fête.

PONT. Very well! A word, Jasmin. Do you know Francois—him of the blue stockings?

JAS. The scribbler of the market-place?

PONT. Yes! You will send for him at once. We have an account to settle together!

JAS. I obey! Excuse my words of a few moments ago. We are bound more closely than ever to you, by your affectionate proof of loyalty to your old principles! (Rubs his back. All copy action, sympathetically.) Come; prepare for this evening's festivities!

Allegro.

The musical score is written for piano in 6/8 time with a key signature of one sharp (F#). It consists of five systems of two staves each (treble and bass clef). The first system begins with a forte (f) dynamic and includes a piano (p) dynamic marking later in the system. The music features a mix of chords and melodic lines, with some passages marked with accents. The score concludes with a double bar line at the end of the fifth system.

Exeunt all, c. except the MARQUIS.

PONT. I do not understand this popularity; for I am suddenly the people's favorite, thanks to the infernal song which that rascal Francois corrected. Corrected? Yes, with a vengeance! What will the king say? The situation is a serious one. I could look to the people for support, but,—bless me—it's an awkward piece of business! What's to be done?

COUNT. Ah brother! I was seeking you. I've such important news for you. I'm on the traces of your long-lost daughter—Jeanne!

PONT. (Startled and moved.) Jeanne!

COUNT. Yes, who was carried off at the burning of your chateau at Pitou, by vagabonds.

PONT. She lives, then? And you have found her in custody of those wretches?

COUNT. No; but with a good woman who brought her to Paris.

She has given me the most precise details of everything, and the memory of her youth that I have awakened in the girl herself, leaves no longer room for doubt.

PONT. My child alive and found! But how did you discover her!

COUNT. By chance—providence. She was singing in the streets.

PONT. (Overwhelmed.) My daughter—a Pontcornet—singing in the streets?

COUNT. Yes, the song you wrote for her so long ago.

PONT. (Drawing her towards him, and recognizing her) Why, it's my little songster of this morning! Can it be? (Examines her.) You were only five years old, and—you have grown so!

COUNT. She is your daughter, all the same. She could not stop growing until you had found her again!

PONT. I did not think of that. She has her mother's eyes! That song, too!—I must believe it! She is very pretty—and bears herself in an aristocratic manner. She inherited that from me. (Takes her hand.) And such delicate hands! Come, child, embrace your father!

FAN. (Timidly.) Pardon me—this surprise—my emotion—this sudden change in my life!

PONT. Think of the change it has made in mine! I am your father. And as a natural and logical consequence, you are my daughter. (Kisses and embraces her.) Take her, sister. Clothe her in attire worthy her new rank, while I talk with Madame Militza. My daughter must eclipse all my guests to-night. I leave that to you.

COUNT. She shall have the richest garbs from her mother's wardrobe—until she has one of her own.

FAN. (Aside) And Francois! How am I to let him know?

COUNT. Come, child! Come!

Exit R. 2. E., with FATINE.

PONT. What a romance! And now, Militza, give me all the particulars. But first about yourself. You are married?

MIL. Alas! Yes and no! I had an excellent husband, with whom I kept an inn in Switzerland. His name was Kirschwasser.

PONT. One moment. I know this Kirschwasser.

MIL. (With joy.) Oh! You know him!

PONT. I am mistaken. It is a drink of the same name. Go on with your story.

MIL. We did not live happily together. It was my fault. I was jealous—and his hair was long and so tempting! —

PONT. That you felt obliged to borrow a handful of it, now and then!

MIL. Alas—yes! He ran away, and I have not seen him since.

Enter JASMIN, E.

JAS. The person I was sent for is here.

PONT. Ah! Good! (To MIL.) Enter here, madame. (Points L. 2. E.) We will resume our conversation by and by. I shall recompense your devotion.

MIL. (At door.) You are too good! (Exit L. 2. E.)

PONT. (To JAS.) Now show Francois in. (Exit JAS., C.) I hope, at last, that I shall obtain some explanation of the cause of my popularity.

Enter FRANCOIS, C.

FRAN. You wish to see me!

PONT. Ah! you are there, are you? (Reproachfully.) You know what happened to me? The people brought me home in triumph.

FRAN. So I hear!

PONT. Thanks to your song. Do you know what you have done? You have lost me my position at court,—for as soon as the king hears of it, he will be furious!

FRAN. When you know my reasons—

PONT. Silence, sir! You have turned me into a common politician, who changes his politics in a moment for mob applause. Such a thing was never heard of.

FRAN. (Smilingly.) Do you think so? And as to the song, on this 10th of July, 1789, serious questions are stirring Frenchmen to the very soul. You were looked upon as dangerous to the liberal cause, thanks to your songs in favor of the court. You were a marked man. In changing your latest song, I have saved you from a great peril that threatened you.

PONT. Well, I don't thank you for it. I have even sent for you to ask you to undo what you have done.

FRAN. That's easy enough. Tell your friends at court that I mutilated your song,

PONT. But, my dear fellow, in that case, their vengeance will fall upon you, and it is you who will be arrested. Why should I destroy you for trying to save me?

FRAN. (Bitterly.) What does it matter? My heart suffers from one pain that renders it insensible to every other.

PONT. Oh, very well then. Besides, if something disagreeable is to happen, perhaps it is better it should happen to you than to me—that is, if you are so indifferent to it one way or the other.

Enter JASMIN, C.

JAS. (Announcing.) The Chevalier de Lansac!

PONT. My nephew! I'll receive him in a moment.

FRAN. If you will permit me, I will go to the library and write a letter explaining the whole affair. If you are then called upon, you can completely exonerate yourself.

PONT. That is generous! On my part, if you get into trouble, I'll look after you. Depend upon me, my dear blue-stockings—I mean, my dear Francois! This way. (Points R. 2. E.)

FRAN. It will be soon done. (Exit R. 2. E.)

PONT. Request my nephew to come to me.

Exit JASMIN, C., LANSAC, enters immediately, C.

LAN. Good day, my dear uncle.

PONT. Ah! And where do you come from?

LAN. (Sarcastically.) From the market-place, where I had the honor to be a witness to your glorious triumph! Do you know you are almost as popular now as Lafayette himself?

PONT. (Angrily.) Go to the—! But, tell me—what the deuce were you doing in the market place?

LAN. (Sighs.) A love affair that turned out badly. The little beauty that I proposed to carry off, was carried off by somebody else. But I shall find her again, never fear!

PONT. Women, always women! Why is it that you can think of nothing else?

PONT. Like a romance. You see, she sings.

LAN. (Puzzled) She sings!

PONT. (Embarrassed) Yes—she sings—because,—because she is lively. (Aside.) He must not know she is a street singer. (Aloud.) The fact is, that at the burning of the chateau she was stolen by gypsies. (Aside.) Now for a good one! (Aloud.) She was rescued by a good woman and placed in one of the best convents in Touraine, to be educated. (Aside) Wheugh! (Aloud.) By a miraculous chance, my sister went there—or rather was passing—or something of that kind—she does go there occasionally you know—and heard her sing. The voice struck her—and also the words of the song—and—my sister asked the Lady Superior, and the Lady Superior asked the girl and they—they all asked each other—and all was discovered,—and that's how my daughter was restored to me. (Aside.) That ought to settle it!

LAN. Upon my honor, uncle, I share in your joy. Am I not to meet my cousin?

PONT. Certainly, certainly! But you must be indulgent to her at first. Her manners are a trifle rough, and her education is none of the most thorough—

LAN. But the best convent Touraine—

PONT. (Perplexed.) True, I forgot that—I mean, they spoiled her there by over-indulgence.

LAN. Well, I congratulate you on your good fortune. There is more reason now than ever to settle this unfortunate business of your revolutionary song. Monsieur de Breteuil is terribly angry about it. I was present at your triumph, and as I feared something disastrous might ensue, I went to our friend's house at once. He has given me this note for you.

PONT. (Seizing note) Ah! Let me see! (Reads.) "My Dear Marquis: Make a public disavowal of your song, or to-night you shall sleep in the Bastille. BRETEUIL." The Bastille? The deuce! Very friendly, that! I'll go to him at once, for I have just found a means of exonerating myself. (Looks R. 2. E.)

Enter JASMIN, C.

JAS. The guests have just arrived.

PONT. It is destined I shall not have a moment's peace. I'll be with them at once. (Exit JAS.) That is to say—(To LAN.)—you shall receive them.

Enter COUNTESS, R. I. E., with FANTINE in fine attire.

COUNT. Ah, brother!

PONT. (Perplexed.) Now she comes.—and my daughter whom I had forgotten! She is charming, and (To COUNT.) you've given another proof of your good taste, sister. Come, nephew! Let me present you to your cousin (With grimaces at COUNT., and winks at FAN.) whom we have just rescued from a convent in Brittany.

LAN. But you just said Touraine!

PONT. (Confused.) Yes, yes! From Touraine in Brittany. (Aside.) Liars should have good memories. (Aloud.) Come. (Moves so as to bring FANTINE in sight of LANSAC.) My daughter, I have the pleasure to present to you, my nephew, the Chevalier de Lansac.

FAN. AND LAN. (Each starting.) Ah!

LAN. (To PONT.) Why, 'tis Fantine, the street singer! (Astounded.)

FAN. (To COUNTESS.) It is the young man who followed me! (Indignant.)

PONT. (Aside to LAN.) Be quiet, idiot! I'll explain everything, by and by. (Takes him aside and whispers.)

COUNT. (Aside to FAN.) Followed you, eh? He's in love with you, then! (Aside) A brilliant idea! (Aloud) Nephew, offer your arm to your cousin. (FAN. goes up, pouting.)

PONT. Certainly. Offer her your arm. Why do you stand there, gaping at me like a moon-struck calf?

LAN. (Aside to COUNT) Where is the joke?

COUNT. (To LAN.) There is no joke. Come, Chevalier, give your arm to your cousin, Mlle. de Pontcornet.

LAN. It is my cousin then? (Aside.) There's cozening somewhere! (Aloud) So we are near relations? I am delighted! (Offers arm.)

FAN. (Timidly takes his arm.) I—I—Excuse me, Chevalier, but—

I'm so surprised, so confused! (They go up stage slowly, and exeunt, C.)

PONT. Sister, do the honors in my absence. Receive my guests. I must go to the chateau. (Going, C.)

COUNT. Brother, what a lovely pair! Seeing them together, do you not think of marriage!

PONT. Marriage? Rubbish! Are you mad? I find my daughter this morning. I can't marry her this evening. She'll keep! (Going.) Let me see if Francois has finished my letter. (Exit R. 2. E.)

COUNT. Their marriage would complete my joy. Francois would think no more of her, and would be free to give his attention wholly to me. (Enter NICOLET, C., dressed as a confectioner's apprentice, and carrying under his arm a small, flat wicker basket.)

NICO. Ah, excuse me! (Aside, surprised.) Eh! She! My master's customer?

COUNT. (Surprised.) Nicolet! What are you doing here?

NICO. I have entered the service of Monsieur Gratinet, the confectioner, and have been sent by him with these delicacies.

COUNT. Then you have left Francois?

NICO. (Significantly.) He has closed his shop, you know; all on account of a love affair—a street singer who jilted him, to fall in love with a gay young nobleman.

COUNT. Ah! My nephew, the Chevalier de Lansac.

NICO. (Eagerly.) Your nephew? (Aside.) That's well to know!

COUNT. And where is Francois?

NICO. (Insinuatingly.) Scouring Paris for his little songstress. But he'll not find her, will he! (Laughs strategically.) He, he! He can't find her, of course; because she's here. (Waits reply anxiously.)

COUNT. (Unconsciously.) Yes, yes!

NICO. (Aside with joy.) Ah! It is so, then?

COUNT. (Anxiously) But where can Francois be found?

NICO. At the revolutionary club, where he is to speak to-night.

COUNT. Thank you. (Aside.) To-night I'll go! (Aloud.) This way, Nicolet. (Poits L. I. E.)

NICO. Thanks, madame. (Aside.) She is here. How to tell Francois. (Exit L. I. E.)

COUNT. (Going up.) Cost what it may, Fantine must be married and placed out of the reach of Francois. (Nico. looks in cautiously, L. I. E.) And at once! (Exit C.)

NICO. (Entering.) The game is won! I've learned all I wanted to know. Wasn't it a clever idea, and won't Francois be pleased with my day's work!

FRAN. (Outside, R. 2. E.) Good luck to you, Marquis! (Enter R. 2. E.)

NICO. (Astonished) Master!

FRAN. (Same) Nicolet, what are you doing here?

NICO. (Mysteriously.) Hush! Mum! Not a word! I'm at work for you. Seeing you so sad, I wished to find out what had become of Fantine.

FRAN. (Quickly.) And you have succeeded?

NICO. (Excitedly, and speaking quickly.) Yes; at first, I set the neighbors talking and then I learned that Fantine and Militza had gone away with the Countess de la Savonniere.

FRAN. (Startled) The Countess! She!

NICO. Yes; the aunt of the Chevalier de Lansac; the young nobleman, you know, who followed Fantine so persistently, for a long time.

FRAN. (Astounded.) Her nephew!

NICO. Yes. And Fantine is here!

FRAN. Here!

NICO. With her father, the Marquis de Pontcornet.

FRAN. (Stunned.) The Marquis her father! Ah, then indeed Fantine is lost to me forever!

NICO. And why? Cheer up! You must see her and speak to her.

FRAN. (Hastily.) You are right—but how?

NICO. Do not be hasty or imprudent. Leave everything to me. I am going to find her, and I'll tell her you are here. Ah! but we'll be cunning. These nobles may be powerful, but we'll show them we can outwit them. No one suspects me here; and in a short time I'll return and tell you all you can wish to know.

FRAN. Good Nicolet, kind Nicolet, go! Go, question, seek, guess, but hasten.

NICO. Depend upon me, master. Brought up in the streets of Paris, I am like a hunting dog. Nothing can throw me off a scent I have once found. (Exit quickly, L. I. E.)

FRAN. And am I never to see her again? Must I say farewell forever to her? Alas! She is rich and noble, and can never stoop to one as lowly as I am. Ah! Fantine! Fate has torn you from my arms;—but in pity's name, do not drive me from your heart! (Enter FANTINE. He sees her.) Fantine!

FAN. Francois! (They embrace.)

COUNT. (Aside.) Break, heart! (Aloud.) You here, Monsieur Francois, after the trick you played the Marquis! Your boldness is refreshing! Still I'm not very angry with you, for I wanted to see you. (To FAN.) My child, you are to be the queen of tonight's fête, and if you will permit me, I will give you a few ideas. (LANSAC appears, c.) And, by the way, here is your cousin who seems to be looking for you. Go to him. I'll come to you soon. (FRANCOIS makes an angry movement.)

FAN. (Aside to FRANCOIS,) Patience, and wait for me. (Gives her arm to LANSAC, and exit c., after saluting the COUNTESS.)

FRAN. (Aside.) I'll doubt you no more, Fantine, my soul!

COUNT. (Aside.) And now, for the decisive movement! Courage, fluttering heart—courage! (Aloud.) Francois!

FRAN. (Bows.) Madame?

COUNT. (Resolutely.) Let us speak plainly, freely and clearly, as between man and man.

FRAN. (Astounded.) Man and man?

COUNT. (Coolly.) I am a widow—and a philosopher. I have studied Jean Jacques Rosseau!

FRAN. Oh—I see!

COUNT. (With precision.) You love Fantine; but Madmoiselle Pontcornet is too high above you. A Pontcornet cannot marry an inferior (Correcting herself,) unless she is a widow, and—a philosopher like myself!

FRAN. (Aside.) I begin to understand! (Aloud.) In the times in which we live, all roads to distinction are open to everyone. I can win Fantine, and she will wait for me.

COUNT. Fantine! Madmoiselle Pontcornet is betrothed to her cousin, the Chevalier de Lansac.

FRAN. Betrothed? To de Lansac? You jest!

COUNT. You must give up your hopes in that direction. But happiness awaits you in another—in the same family! Am I plain?

FRAN. (Aside.) Very! (Aloud and somewhat jeeringly.) It is too much honor to hope for!

COUNT. You have discovered the sentiments you have awakened in me. You feared to speak. I have spoken for you. A widow—and a philosopher may speak freely. Treasures of the tenderest love have been accumulating in my heart ever since I became a widow. Speak but the word and they are all yours!

FRAN. Madame. (Aside.) I must not anger her. Prudence, prudence!

COUNT. (Aside.) He is reflecting. (Aloud.) I feel delicate in bringing my merits to your notice; but you compel me to do so, as you do not seem to be aware of the value of the prize within your reach.

FRAN. (Aside.) What fascinating fervor! (Laughs.) She must be told all. (Aloud.) Madame, believe me, I feel happy and honored by the frank suggestion you have but now made, but I have sworn to love none other than Fantine.

COUNT. You refuse, then, a palpitating heart? A heart that beats for thee alone? So much the worse for you. Mademoiselle de Pontcornet will wed the chevalier de Lansac, all the same; and then, ungrateful man, you will have time to reconsider your determination—and to repent.

COUNT. What now, brother?

PONT. I have just told the people that I was not the author of that confounded song. See the result! (Turns.) Oh! (Groans.) But that is not all. Before I could disavow the poem to the court, the order was out for my arrest. I showed a letter Francois wrote, saying he alone was to blame. Too late! I begged, implored, and, at last, was told if I would deny the song publicly something might be done for me. I go to the market-place, and do deny it! Carrots, cabages, potatoes, eggs—not fresh—and other vegetables. fly like hail about my head. The mob follows me to my very door shouting—"Down with Pontcornet!"

COUNT. Thank fortune you are now in safety!

LAN. They shall, at least, find one who is not afraid to face them!

PONT. Indeed? (Shakes hands with him.) Thank you. In that case, there's no need for me to stay here. I'll fly to England. With the rabble on one side, and the Bastille on the other, there's nothing else to do!

COUNT. And your daughter?

PONT. The deuce! I didn't think of her. I've had her such a short time, you see. Now I think of it, I must save my life for her sake. I'm off! I'll leave her to your tender care.

COUNT. I've a better idea. (Aside to LAN.) You love her! She is worthy of you. Endorse what I say. (Aloud.) Brother, the danger is one that calls for bold and immediate action. Your daughter needs a husband—a protector—he is here! (Points to LAN.)

PONT. My nephew!

COUNT. Yes, who has loved his cousin from her childhood!

FAN. Yes, my dear uncle, from her tenderest infancy!

COUNT. You hear? Consent to this marriage, where rank and birth are in accord, and you can go without fear of your daughter's future.

PONT. You are right. It shall be as you say, and I'll have only my own future to look after.

FRANCOIS appears at door, R. 2. E.

FRAN. I'm uneasy in my mind! (Sees others.) Ah! (Conceals himself again.)

PONT. Well, then, nephew, it's understood you are to marry my daughter.

COUNT. (Who has gone up.) Ah! And here she is! (Enter FAN., c.) My child, we have been discussing your future happiness.

FAN. My happiness? Oh, how kind!

FRAN. (Advancing.) Fantine!

FAN. Francois! (Going to him joyfully.)

COUNT. (Interposing.) Your father, compromised by an unfortunate jest of that—injudicious person, is obliged to fly into exile—

PONT. (Lachrymosely.) Yes; and I should be on my way now!

COUNT. (To FAN.) Or take the choice of two alternatives—the Bastille, or mobbing by the angry people!

PONT. Either of which result is equally unpleasing to contemplate.

COUNT. My brother starts at once for England, and leaves you to my care and that of your future husband!

FAN. (Looks at FRAN., pleased.) My future husband!

COUNT. Don't look that way, but this! (Points to LANSAC.)

FAN. (Revolting.) That my husband! Oh, father! No, no! I will follow you into exile! I will share your dangers and privations; but I cannot, I will not marry the Chevalier when I love another!

GRAT. (Seated at table, R., with COURTALIN and KIRSCHWASSER.) So, my dear Kirschwasser, you are content with the turn affairs have taken?

KIRSCH. Delighted, my boy! It was a lucky day when I resigned my regimentals.

GRAT. The day after the taking of the Bastille?

KIRSCH. Yes; where I had conducted poor Francois. I was as savage as a bear. I have said good by to my uniform and have become an innkeeper. I no longer carry the nation's colors on my back.

COURT. True! You now carry your own color in your nose!

KIRSCH. (Laughs.) Yes; and warranted not to fade! Well, I'm glad I'm no longer a soldier. (Enter JASMIN from inn, in attire of wine-dealer's assistant.)

JAS. Yes; and you are not the only man who has abandoned his uniform.

KIRSCH. True. (Presenting JASMIN.) My assistant, Citizen la Rondeur.

JAS. Formerly Jasmin, steward to the Marquis de Pontcornet.

COURT. (Laughing.) And now a patriot of patriots!

JAS. One moment, please. When the Marquis deserted me by quitting Paris, I simply changed the servants' livery for the workingman's apron.

KIRSCH. This is all very well; but business is business.

JAS. Yes, citizen, I am going to fill the order of general Lafayette. Six bottles of Sauterne, was it not?

KIRSCH. Yes; six bottles, go! (Exit JASMIN into inn.)

GRAT. I hope that business prospers with you.

COURT. And that Madame Kirschwasser attracts her share of customers to your shop.

KIRSCH. She does, I assure you. I wasn't at all sorry to find her at Pontcornet's. Only think of it. Two of my men, in searching the house, found her and brought her to me as a suspicious character. I should have recognized her by the scratches on the faces of her capturers, if I had not known her the moment I set eyes on her. Well.—I'm a forgiving nature, and she is, as she always was, a very striking woman—I mean to look at. I forgave her—she forgave me. I wear a wig, and we're happy. Ah! she makes business very lively.

GRAT. For her husband?

KIRSCH. (Sheepishly.) Well, you see, she has to make up for lost time; and I,—well, I have become accustomed to discipline. (Laughs.) She's my corporal.

MIL. (Outside from shop.) Kirschwasser! Kirschwasser!

KIRSCH. There she is! Eyes front!

MIL. (Appears at door.) Already with a glass in your hand!

KIRSCH. The glass is the inn-keeper's musket, and I'm on drill. (Drinks.)

MIL. (Good-naturedly.) To-day you must have your wits about you, for there's trouble brewing.

COURT. Ah, yes! The municipal election. Well (raises glass), here's success to our commander, Francois!

GRAT. And he will be elected.

KIRSCH. And he deserves it! 'Pristi! He has made his way quickly since the day he was rescued from the Bastille.

FRAN. (Sighs.) Well,—thanks. You will soon return to the lieutenant of police for further news?

COURT. Yes, commander. (As he goes up with GRATINET.) Do you see what a sharp lookout he keeps for conspirators from England? (Exeunt into guard-house followed by soldiers.)

FRAN. (To KIRSCH. and MILITZA.) Ah! my good friends.

KIRSCH. (Moved.) I, your friend? I, who arrested you?

MIL. (Looking significantly at KIRSCH.) Yes, and it was the very last order of any kind he has shown a desire to obey.

KIRSCH. (Aside, as he escapes into inn.) My corporal doesn't seem amiable this morning. (Exit into inn.)

FRAN. (Sadly.) No news yet from Fantine, my good Militza. I fear I shall never see her again.

MIL. And you love her still?

FRAN. More than ever. That Pontcornet, compromised and condemned, should fear to return to Paris I can understand. But Fantine! Ah! if she really loved me, she would be here.

MIL. Think of her duty to her family.

FRAN. Think of her duty to me. For two months I have awaited her return in vain. Ah! Militza, she has forgotten me. (Falls into chair by table.)

MIL. Well, well, patience,—patience. I have my own ideas about her absence.

Enter from inn KIRSCH. with a bottle which he caresses tenderly.

KIRSCH. (Cajolingly to MILITZA.) Just one, you know, to celebrate his election. See how sad he looks. This will cheer him up. It always cheers me when you make me sad. (MILITZA starts. KIRSCH. corrects himself.) I mean, when I make you sad.

MIL. Will you be quiet, you drunkard?

KIRSCH. One moment. I forbid you to call me a drunkard.

MIL. (Astonished.) Eh! You forbid? I forbid you to forbid me anything. (About to slap his face.)

MIL. Well, then, off with you.

KIRSCH. (Salutes) All right, corporal. (Aside, and going.) Discipline is discipline! (Goes into inn hustled by MILITZA)

The people pay them after being served, which is during the refrain, and then exeunt at different entrances.

PONT. Nobody recognizes us. Our disguises are a great success.

COUNT. Yes, but not improving to our personal appearance. (Looking about.) But where can Lansac be? We were to meet him at Militza's.

PONT. I hope he has found my daughter.

COUNT. Depend upon it he has followed her closely. To think of her quitting us to return to Paris, perhaps to meet her old lover, Francois.

PONT. Impossible! A Pontcornet could not disgrace herself so.

COUNT. But she has been a Pontcornet for such a short time!

PONT. Will Lansac never come? I am tired of dragging this dreadful machine around.

COUNT. And I of crying coffee.

PONT. I'm dying of thirst.

COUNT. Well, and why do you not drink from your fountain!

PONT. Of course! I've a right to drink my own cider. I've paid dearly enough for it! (Takes goblet, and turns tap.) Not a drop! Of course! My luck! I must have it filled, because a vender of cider without any cider to vend would be open to suspicion. Where the deuce do they sell the stuff? Ah! try that.

COUNT. But if you can't get there?

PONT. Then I'll make some lemonade. It can't be any more sour than the cider.

Enter JAS. from inn, carrying a basket with six bottles.

PONT. Ah! here is somebody. I say, my good fellow, what have you there?

JAS. What's that your business? (Crosses him.)

PONT. (Kicks him.) You rascal! How dare you!

JAS. (Startled and aside.) Ah! That kick! I know the trademark. It is the marquis.

COUNT. (Aside.) Brother, your noble manner will betray you.

JAS. (Aside.) If it be he, I'll make him pay for kicking a citizen!

PONT. What sort of wine have you there?

JAS. Sauterne.

PONT. That'll do. Pour it in here. I'll sell it for lemonade.

JAS. Sauterne for lemonade?

PONT. Yes. It's a private recipe of my own. (Takes bottles, and with the aid of COUNTESS, fills the fountain; JAS. drawing the corks.) It's expensive, I know, but I am going to give the people a treat.

JAS. (Drawing corks.) A treat,—yes! And I'll give you a treat for that kick. It must be the marquis.

PONT. How much have I to pay you?

JAS. (Winking, aside.) Thirty-eight francs.

PONT. (Aside.) The scoundrel! (Aloud.) Very cheap. Here! ives him money.

JAS. (Aside.) English money! It is the marquis! (Aloud.) Much obliged! (Aside.) I'll go and inform on him! It's mean, I know, but it will show my patriotism. (Aloud.) I'll get your change.

PONT. (Loftily.) Keep the change.

JAS. Eh! (Aside.) Fourteen francs for the waiter? The country's in danger! I'll notify the guard. (Exit into guardhouse.)

COUNT. Will Lansac never come?

PONT. Do not be impatient; we will wait here, no one will recognize us.

Enter JAS. with GRAT., COURT. and guards.

JAS. (Aside to them, and pointing.) There they are—English spies, who sell Sauterne for lemonade!

GRAT. Leave them to me. (Approaches PONT., and slapping him on back) Well, citizen, how does business prosper with you?

PONT. (Terrified.) The guard!

COUNT. The guard! (Wipes her cups in a frenzied manner, on her apron, turning her back to the soldiers.)

PONT. (Assuming a silly country air.) Good. Business is very good.

GRAT. And your lemonade good, also? Give me a glass.

PONT. Certainly. Here—here! (Turns out glass.)

GRAT. (To guards.) Help yourselves, comrades. It is only two sous a glass. It is my treat.

COURT. To the health of Francois Blue Stockings.

COUNT. Francois? You know him? (PONT. drinks.)

COURT. Know him? Why, he's our commander. He was here but a few moments ago

PONT. (Anxiously.) Here! And alone?

COURT. What do you mean by alone?

PONT. (Troubled.) Why, alone! When I say alone, I mean—not double—that is—I've heard of his having a—a—pretty companion.

GRAT. Oh! You mean Fantine, the daughter of the Marquis de Pontcornet, perhaps. The old idiot refused to give her to Francois.

PONT. (Aside.) Old idiot! Oh, if I only had him alone, with three or four trusty friends to help me! (Drinks from fountain.)

COUNT. Does Francois still love her?

GRAT. Devotedly. (COUNT. sighs.)

COURT. (Putting his hand on PONT.'s shoulder.) Ah! that traitor Pontcornet. It was he, you know, who had Francois thrown into the Bastile.

PONT. (Forgetting himself.) It's false.

OMNES. What! (PONT. drinks frantically.)

COURT. Do you dare to defend Pontcornet?

PONT. Do I look like a man who would defend Pontcornet? Nonsense! To the deuce with Pontcornet! (Aside.) Anywhere but here. (Drinks.)

GRAT. (Drinks, tasting.) What does this mean? You sell Sauterne for lemonade, and this lad tells me (Points to JASMIN.) that you make change in English money.

PONT. (Slightly drunk.) But nay dear Gratinet.

GRAT. (Surprised.) Ah! You know me then, citizen?

COUNT. No, no. My brother is near-sighted and liable to mistakes.

GRAT. (Examining them.) One moment. Ah! I know you now. It is the Countess de—de Boutonnière.

COUNT. (Forgetting herself. Angrily.) Savonnière, if you please.

GRAT. Ah! I thought so. And you are the Marquis de Pontcornet.

OMNES. Pontcornet!

PONT. (Tipsily.) Well, yes, it's so. You're not going to arrest one of your best customers, are you?

JAS. As much as we shall regret it, Citizen Marquis, we shall have to take that trouble.

PONT. (Suddenly.) What! It's Jasmin, my faithful and trusted vassal!

GRAT. (Seeing angry movement of guards.) There are no longer any vassals, citizen.

PONT. All right, all right. We won't have any then. I don't want them, and if you don't—

GRAT. There! That will do. You've talked long enough. Seize him! Take him to the guard-house. Take her also. Off with them! Away!

PONTCORNET and COUNTESS resist, but are taken to the guard house, whither they are followed by all but JASMIN, the prisoners remonstrating, the soldiers muttering threats.

JAS. Ah! No one will doubt my principles now, and the kick, the insulting kick is avenged! (Exit into inn.)

Enter FANTINE, L. U. E., dressed as a street singer.

FAN. No one here! In the market place the shop of Francois is closed, and Militza's house is also deserted by her. What shall I do? I see nobody I know. But never mind. I shall find him I love. But where? (Struck with an idea.) The little street singer can still attract a crowd. I'll sing. I then may find somebody whom I used to know. Perhaps Francois himself. Yes, yes. (Looks off R.) Ah, there are some now! This way, good people, this way. (People begin to fill stage slowly, and are followed by others, who gather while the song is going on.) This way, and I'll sing you the latest song of the day. (Affecting gayety and manners of street singer.) Come! Listen to me.

NICO. KIRSCH., MIL. His wife!

LAN. (To FAN., aside.) Silence! (Aloud.) Certainly, my wife. Why not? Since when has a French citizen been forbidden to marry whom he chooses? I married my cousin in London. If she has disguised herself in this manner, it is because she knew that we are very suspicious just now of people coming from England.

ALL. (Nodding to each other.) True! True!

LAN. Besides, the name, Pontcornet, is not in favor at present, as you all know. But the wife of Citizen Lansac has nothing to fear, I hope.

COURT. Nothing. (To people, who have pressed about FAN.) Come, come,—make way there! (Exeunt men and women of the people gradually.)

NICO. (Aside to GRAT.) The wife of Lansac? And Francois! What a blow for him!

KIRSCH. This way, citizen. (Aside.) I wonder if they fight yet! (Exit into inn, followed by LANSAC)

FAN. My dear Militza!

MIL. Ah! That you should have married anybody but Francois!

FAN. I will explain all, by and by. But tell me, where is he?

MIL. But your husband—

LAN. (Offers arm, and gravely.) Your arm, wife.

FAN. (Takes his arm.) I'll see you soon, Militza. (Exit into inn, with LANSAC.)

KIRSCH. Married? It has completely knocked me over. Think of it. It only took her two months to forget Francois! Is there such a thing in the world as a true woman?

MIL. What do you say?

KIRSCH. (Angrily.) I say that all women are false, fickle and treacherous; and it strikes me—

MIL. Does it? (Slaps his face.)

KIRSCH. (Rubs face.) That strikes me too! (Salutes.) All right, corporal. Discipline is discipline.

MIL. To think of it! Married, and to that fop,—that bandbox,—Lansac!

KIRSCH. It strikes me—no, it doesn't. No! I beg pardon. I mean, I'd like to wring that Lansac's neck. Perhaps you would prefer to do it, and were getting your hand into practice when you nearly knocked my head off just now.

MIL. (Driving him into inn.) Will you be off? March!

KIRSCH. (Salutes.) All right, corporal. (Going to inn.)

FRAN. Alas! It is true, then?

KIRSCH. They have told you—
